

Create In-text Citations

Exercise 1

Directions: Below are a few quotes or facts, along with the source information. Decide whether to quote, use a partial quote, or paraphrase the information, and then create one in-text citation for each number. There are a number of right ways to do this, so be creative. Click here for a PDF of this exercise.

Source #1: Mr. Kurtz

Quote: “Severed heads on poles will accomplish much in the way of keeping order and creating respect for authority when one lives in a dark jungle.”

Credentials: Runs a trading post in Africa that deals with ivory

Source #2: Henry (Indiana) Jones Jr.

Quote: “Using a whip is not necessary when discovering the buried and hidden past, but it is fun.”

Credentials: an archaeology professor at Marshall College, New Britain, Connecticut, and a world-renown archaeologist

Source #3: www.ayankeein.sci

Quote: “Time travel is possible, but only to castles.”

Credentials: a respected time travel Web site

Source #4: LOTFlies organization

Fact: “Six out of ten boys would rather hunt wild boar than go hungry.”

Credentials: specializes in spear making

Possible Answers to Create In-text Citations

(NOTE: There are many correct ways to create in-text citations from the sources and quotes.)

1. Mr. Kurtz, who runs a trading post in Africa that specializes in ivory, says that “severed heads on poles will accomplish much in the way of keeping order and creating respect for authority when one lives in a dark jungle.”

2. “Using a whip is not necessary when discovering the buried and hidden past,” reveals Henry (Indiana) Jones Jr., archaeology professor at Marshall College, New Britain, Connecticut, and a world-renown archaeologist, “but it is fun.”

3. According to www.ayankeein.sci, time travelers should expect to arrive only at castles.

4. LOTFlies, an organization that specializes in spear making, maintains that sixty percent of boys “would rather hunt wild boar than go hungry.”